

The Anthropology Club of Boise State University, Archaeological Students Association along with Boise State Linguistics Association are proud to bring:

Endangered Languages

Dr. K. David Harrison,

Associate Provost and Professor of Linguistics, Swarthmore College

Friday February 16th, 2018 3:00 p.m. at the Special Events Center in the Student Union Building

This event is open to the public.

Half of the world's languages are endangered and may go extinct in this century. The loss of these languages will have dire consequences not only for their speakers, but also for culture, science, and the environment. Around the world, speakers of endangered languages are mounting strategic efforts to save their languages. This presentation features photos and video clips of speakers of some of the world's most endangered languages, from Siberia, India, the USA and other locations, and will demonstrate how indigenous activists and linguists are working to sustain languages through technology and art.
